WOMAN ACCUSES MAN OF MURDER

CINCINNATI, July 17. — With eyes flashing, her face pale and lips quivering, Grace Billingsby stood before Louis Wohlweber, said to be the son of a San Francisco policeman, here today and, with finger pointed at him, said: "You are Walter West; you are the man that hit that old man. You are the man who robbed him, if he was robbed."

It was a dramatic scene. The woman sank back into a chair as though exhausted. West sat like one spellbound. Looking at the group of officers as though seeking relief, he slowly shook his head and denied the accusation of guilt for the murder of Squire Singleton.

The scene took place in the detective room in the city hall, in the presence of Chief Crawford, Lieutenant Poppe and Detectives Callahan and Jackson.

Grace Billingsby, confessing to be West's accomplice, had to face what she said was the ordeal of her life. She repeated her confession in West's presence. She told of meeting Singleton and of taking him to her room. West entered, she said. There was a scuffle. Singleton was knocked down, tied and robbed.

The woman, whom West claims to be in love with, spoke directly at the accused man. West admitted that he was in Cincinnati with the woman, but he denied that he was in the room at the time the blow was struck or when the man was bound and gagged. He hinted at a third person, but he would not say who he meant.

"There's no third person," Grace Billingsby said. "Walter West, you did it, and you know you did. You are the man."

Both were held to the grand jury this afternoon on a charge of murder.

ARSON TO HIDE A DEFALCATION

STOCKTON, July 17. — The grand jury today, at the close of a painstaking investigation, found indictments for arson against H. Dilse Hopkins, son of Dr. S. W. Hopkins, former proprietor and editor of the Lodi Herald, and Lester E. Palmer, a former pressman on the same publication. The bail of each man was fixed in the sum of $15,000. Both Hopkins and Palmer are in jail in Stockton. The evidence on which the men were indicted tends to prove that Hopkins paid Palmer $250 to burn the plant of the Lodi Herald on April 13, 1907. The motive for the crime was to destroy partnership books and forever conceal the defalcations of Hopkins. Anonymous letters, alleged to have been written by Palmer, gave the authorities the lead which resulted in the arrest of Hopkins in Los Angeles and Palmer in Whitthall, Michigan.
